Introduction

The Indian literature has been documenting the stories of the Indian women from the classical era up until now. The male authors have naturally dominated the field of literature with their normally stereotyped perceptions of women in their works. It must be said that there has been little truth regarding the lives of women in these male authors' works. Male authors like the Noble Prize winner Rabindranath Tagore, Salman Rushdie, R.K. Narayan, Vikram Seth, Amitav Ghosh, Khushwant Singh, Shashi Tharoor, Amit Chaudhary and Arvind Adiga have carved their names in the international art and have gained a special place in the world literature.

Swami speaks to the universe of confidence in far flung rustic zones and far from the urban limits where science has made across the board advances into its recent space. As opposed to the universe of confidence, the universe of science and the truth is spoken to among others by the specialist and healing facility, Ghose and his office, the watch and thermometer. Dandekar understands that in the realm of science, human feelings don't make a difference. The following novel "A Handful of Rice" is a lamentable depiction of an illogical youth, wriggling out of his rustic shell yet longing for lightheaded statures and after that harrowed intolerably by the forswearing. In such a state of delayed sustenance hardship for him and his family, he suspends considering what is correct or wrong, moral and unethical.

The financial hardships make the helpless to the most noticeably awful sort of debasement pervasive in the public arena. Markandaya demonstrates that the voice of rational soundness and reason got no opportunity of remaining perfectly healthy in the midst of the voice of crazy, envious and inactive individuals. Their assault on godowns is an endeavor to harm the social and financial structure and in the process they experience a similar power Ravi had experienced before all else. The predicament of Ravi is as hopeless as that of Kannan's bother. This is the end result for an individual who defies the rich. He can neither succeed nor gain anything; he can just devastate what exists so it is useful neither to the rich nor to the poor like him.

No matter how wide is the universality of the theme in the male authors' works, the significance and position given to woman characters are very small and cast aside, and no other than being a mother, wife, maid, daughter and widow and divorcee. It is very rare to see the strength, empowerment and vigour of women in the writings of male authors in India. The women characters constructed by these male writers have not represented what the women really experience, but instead, these writers have produced and reflected their own views and perception about this gender.

The portrayal of women's characteristics in these male writers' works is normally weak and passive, as pointed out by Simone Beauvoir. For her, the weakness and passivity of the women's characters in the works of male authors are not reasoned by the factor of female biology but due to the social system that has long been dominated by the power of men.

As Krishna Rao comments, "the genuine truth of the novel is the profound stamina of Rukmani". Notwithstanding when a lady isn't naturally a mother, she can work as one inwardly. As a young lady Ira was a surrogate mother to her siblings. At the point when her most youthful sibling is conceived "Ira's ladylike intuition of nurturance overshadows hurt, distress and disdain. She turns into a "mistress," a "typical strumpet" not to extinguish any consuming flame in her body yet to encourage her feeble sibling. An unusual and stupefying change comes over her.
